

Michelle Lee

Took LSAT: June 2013, December 2013

Score: 169 (96th Percentile)

Jon was such an encouraging and knowledgeable LSAT tutor with really effective study tips! Initially, I was skeptical about whether hiring a private tutor, as opposed to studying with a commercial prep company, was worth the investment, but now in hindsight, I can confidently vouch that it is. With so much riding on a single test score, I felt there was no room for cutting corners, and Jon's expertise was a great investment. Each meeting consisted of reviewing material that was especially difficult for me, and having this tailored learning style made a big difference. Since we were in different cities, our tutoring sessions had to be conducted over Skype, but video and screen-sharing made it as if we were together in person. His weekly study plan kept me challenged and on track, and it gave me a better idea of a reasonable timeline for prepping.

In addition to being able to clearly explain the questions and concepts, Jon was able to break down the LSAT for me in a way that was much less intimidating! He knows so much about the format of the test, the trends in the past, and literally more about the LSAT than anyone would ever want to know—and it was GREAT, because it literally meant zero surprises on test day. I took it for the first time in June, but didn't feel as if I had studied for long enough, so I cancelled my score and retook it in October. The extra months of studying and Jon's advice definitely enabled me to walk in on test day, confident and mentally prepared.

From law school advice to a step by step breakdown of logical reasoning, Jon is your go-to! He is super personable, funny, and easy to talk to, and I would highly recommend him to anyone studying for the LSAT!