

Samuel Edandison

Took LSAT: October 2012, December 2012

Score: 159 (78th Percentile), 163 (88th Percentile)

There are many LSAT teachers out there, but only a few of them are any good. Lucky for me, John is one of few. I took an LSAT course before I met John. I was frustrated by the teacher's inadequacy to answer my questions and help me do better. With John, I didn't have that problem. First John has an outstanding knowledge of the test. It doesn't matter what question it is, John explains it in a simple coherent manner, creating less confusion.

Not only is John's understanding of the LSAT great but his ability to diagnose students problems sets him apart. The LSAT can be confusing. Usually students don't know why they're getting the questions wrong. John went beyond explaining answers and made me cognizant about how I was thinking about each problem, making me more deeply aware of what I was doing wrong and what I was doing right. My score improved tremendously, and I'm thankful for it.
