Took LSAT: October 2012, December 2012

Attending: Harvard Law School

I had the great fortune of having Jon as an LSAT instructor. Jon helped me tremendously while preparing for the test and I owe a great deal to him. A perfect example of Jon's teaching powers came one day when I was reviewing a question that I had actually gotten correct on a prep test. The only problem was I couldn't articulate why one of the answer choices was incorrect. I asked Jon, but he refused to tell me. After a few minutes of Jon's pointed questioning, though, I finally realized what I was missing; it turned out to be pretty simple.

The LSAT isn't simple and in reality that answer wasn't easy to eliminate. But after working with Jon, the test became very clear and almost routine. Jon's technique is simple: he teaches you, by allowing you to teach yourself. He won't just give you answers, but he will find a way to let you get to the answers yourself. This is, of course, after he has rigorously taught you the fundamentals. If you are serious about the LSAT, there's no better resource to have than Jon Wang.
